POPE BENEDICT has named a Cuban refugee, a Haitian immigrant and the son of Italian immigrants to serve the Diocese of Brooklyn and Queens as auxiliary bishops, it was announced yesterday.

"It is wonderful that the Holy Father has recognized the diversity of our diocese and its pastoral needs," Bishop Nicholas DiMarzio said in presenting the men during a news conference at the Diocesan Building in Windsor Terrace.

The diocese includes 1.8 million Catholics.

"I need lots of help," DiMarzio said. The new bishops are the first the Vatican has appointed to serve here since 1994.

The appointees are: Msgrs. Guy Sansari, Octavio Cisneros and Frank Caggiano.

Sansari, 71, is pastor of St. Jerome's Church in Flatbush. Born in Haiti, he is the first bishop of African ancestry appointed to the diocese, DiMarzio said.

Cisneros, 60, is a Cuban refugee who serves as rector at the Cathedral Residence of the Immaculate Conception. Seminarians live at the Douglaston, Queens, facility while attending college.

Msgr. Frank Caggiano, 47, is diocesan vicar for evangelization and pastoral life. His mother, Gennarina Caggiano, 74, who was born in Italy and now lives in Gravesend, attended yesterday's press conference.

The men will be ordained on Aug. 22, and join Auxiliary Bishop Ignatius Catanello in helping DiMarzio.

While exact duties are still to be determined, DiMarzio said the new bishops will work on getting more men and women to serve the church as priests, brothers and sisters.

Also, there will be a focus on evangelism.

"Many people from diverse countries, speaking different languages, do not know Jesus Christ," DiMarzio said.

"That's the principal ministry of the bishop - to evangelize, to take care pastorally of those who are already Catholics, and always to advance the faith."
