AN IMMIGRANT from Guyana was convicted of murder yesterday for stabbing his fiancée to death three weeks after paying to smuggle her here.

Henry Jacobs, 38, did not react when the Brooklyn Supreme Court jury rejected his claim that he suffered from "extreme emotional disturbance" in October 2005 after his fiancée, Vanessa Bailey, told him not to run her life.

He had just spent thousands of dollars earned by delivering phone books to sneak the attractive beautician and her daughter to Brooklyn.

He faces up to 25 years to life in prison.

"He got what he deserved," said Vanessa's mother, Jacqueline Bailey. "He tried to hide behind insanity. Justice was done."

No jail for man in DWI death

A QUEENS drunken driver who struck and fatally injured a Chinese deliveryman avoided jail yesterday after investigators said the victim was at fault, the defendant's lawyer said.

John Kielbiowski, 58, an electrician, had a .12 blood-alcohol level when his SUV hit Wei Chan, 31, as the deliveryman drove his scooter on the Long Island Expressway service road near 69th St.

He pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor charge before Queens Supreme Court Justice Dorothy Chin-Brandt in exchange for a promised sentence of probation, defense lawyer Joseph Tacopina said.

Chan died of his injuries weeks after the Jan. 18 accident and Kielbiowski was facing up to seven years in prison under the newly enacted Vasean's Law. But an investigation later found that Chan ran a red light, Tacopina said.

"He wasn't legally responsible because the guy on the bike ran the light," he said, adding that the victim "had a pretty crazy driving record."
