

A Haven for Abused Women

The New York Times

April 29, 2004 Thursday, Late Edition - Final

Copyright 2004 The New York Times Company

Section: Section A; Column 1; Editorial Desk; Pg. 24

Length: 329 words

Body

Women who have been threatened with rape, mutilation or other horrors deserve protection from the barbarians who do such things and the societies that allow or encourage such behavior. So it is welcome news that the Department of Homeland Security is drafting rules for allowing asylum for women who flee to this country after suffering from such extreme cases of abuse elsewhere.

At the same time, Attorney General John Ashcroft is now considering a particularly poignant appeal for asylum by a woman from Guatemala. Mr. Ashcroft should grant her request and then support the adoption of the new, enlightened guidelines for helping other abused women seeking asylum in America.

This is not about eroding well-established asylum policies, or creating some flimsy loophole that will open the floodgates to immigrants who simply seek a better life. As the Taliban nightmare in Afghanistan so powerfully illustrated, women in some societies are systematically oppressed as an ideological matter. They deserve the protections international law affords other persecuted exiles.

Asylum is granted for exiles in danger of persecution back home because of their race, religion, ethnicity or political associations, or for being in a particular social group. It is that last category that should cover people like the woman from Guatemala, Rodi Alvarado Pena, who fled to this country after a decade of abuse and whose case is now before the attorney general. Mrs. Alvarado says that her husband repeatedly used her head to break glass and that officials in Guatemala told her they would not protect her from him.

In an enlightened world, no society would force women to wear burkas against their will, or threaten them with death for daring to talk to a man. Mr. Ashcroft and the Department of Homeland Security should make certain that such persecuted women who flee to the United States have a chance to stay.

<http://www.nytimes.com>

Classification

Language: ENGLISH

Document-Type: Editorial

Publication-Type: Newspaper

A Haven for Abused Women

Subject: POLITICAL ASYLUM (91%); NATIONAL SECURITY (78%); WOMEN (78%); US FEDERAL GOVERNMENT (77%); INTERNATIONAL LAW (77%); AGENCY RULEMAKING (77%); ATTORNEYS GENERAL (76%); RACE & ETHNICITY (74%); POLITICAL ORGANIZATIONS (73%); TALIBAN (73%); IMMIGRATION (72%); SPECIAL INVESTIGATIVE FORCES (72%); RELIGION (52%)

Organization: US DEPARTMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY (84%); Homeland Security Department

Person: Rodi Alvarado Pena

Geographic: UNITED STATES (93%); GUATEMALA (90%); AFGHANISTAN (55%); Guatemala

Load-Date: April 29, 2004

End of Document