Body

The heated debate over immigration will resurface in the state Assembly this week as lawmakers consider two constitutional amendments.

Assemblyman Mark Wyland, R-Vista, says his proposal would discourage illegal immigration and avoid enormous costs, in part by preventing illegal immigrants from receiving any health care or social services not required by federal law.

The other constitutional amendment, by Assemblyman Ray Haynes, R-Temecula, would create the California border police, a force of about 1,500 to 2,000 officers who would supplement federal border police and enforce laws that bar employment of illegal immigrants.
