Body

The Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh, the president of the University of Notre Dame, who served on a Federal commission studying refugee problems, said today that the only way to solve the problem of illegal aliens was to open the legal "front door" to refugees.

Father Hesburgh, speaking at the summer commencement at the University of Michigan, also said that the flow of refugees to the United States could be stopped by developing the areas of the world where disease and starvation were rampant.

"In a word," Father Hesburgh told the 2,500 graduates, "we think the front door to America, the legal door, should be opened a bit wider and the back door, the illegal one, closed."
