Body

James W. Ziglar, the Senate's sergeant-at-arms, is the leading candidate to become the next commissioner of immigration and naturalization, Republican aides said.

Ziglar, 55, a native of Mississippi and boyhood friend of Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, would, if nominated and confirmed, assume control over one of the government's fastest-growing and most troubled agencies. A top priority for a new commissioner would be fulfilling Bush's pledge to split the INS into two agencies, one to enforce immigration laws, and the other to provide services to immigrants.
