

Migrate toward reform

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

April 4, 2010 Sunday, Main Edition

Copyright 2010 The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution
ajc.com

Section: OPINION; Pg. 18A

Length: 557 words

Byline: Cynthia Tucker

staff

Body

---

WASHINGTON --- You might not have heard much about it, but immigration supporters held a huge rally on the National Mall two weeks ago. Overshadowed by the spectacle surrounding the health care debate, they were out in large numbers to urge Congress to pass comprehensive immigration reform, which would include a path to citizenship for the estimated 11 million illegal immigrants already here.

President Barack Obama's critics frequently claim that he's too ambitious, taking on too many complex and contentious issues. But the president doesn't have much choice: Several complex and contentious issues have languished too long. Immigration reform is one of those.

It's a shame that a common-sense bill, supported by the Bush administration, died in 2007 after a backlash from the Republican base. The right continues to denounce what its leaders call "amnesty," but they haven't offered a reasonable plan for helping hardworking painters and plumbers, maids and manicurists to come out of the shadows.

What kind of country would deport promising teenage Americans just because their parents came from Guatemala or Gambia without permission? What kind of country would exploit the labor of workers but refuse to allow them the chance at legal status?

Obama told the rally that he would start work soon on immigration reform; he gave his blessing to a framework offered by Sens. Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.) and Chuck Schumer (D-N.Y.). In a Washington Post essay last month, Graham and Schumer called for a high-tech "biometric" Social Security card; stronger border security; increased temporary access for low-skilled workers; and a "tough but fair path to legalization for those already here."

Despite that pledge of bipartisanship, few think the process will be anything but long and bloody. Georgia's Republican senators have already backed away from any support for a comprehensive plan.

At a 2007 meeting of the state Republican Party, Sens. Johnny Isakson (R-Ga.) and Saxby Chambliss (R-Ga.) were loudly booed for their work on legislation that would have tightened border security while also granting illegal workers a path toward citizenship. Neither man has mentioned anything that could be caricatured as "amnesty" since then.

Migrate toward reform

Isakson told me last month that metro Atlanta's new status as a major hub for Mexican narco-traffickers demands a focus on border security. "It would be a gargantuan mistake to try to do some comprehensive legislation," he said. Isakson's concerns about security are legitimate, but there's no reason they couldn't be addressed in a comprehensive bill.

Even if the politics are difficult, Democrats might gain support with their base if they take up the cause of immigration reform. "It divides them [Republicans] worse than us," Democratic pollster/strategist James Carville told a group of journalists last week. "Politically, I think it is a good issue for Democrats to bring up. It gives them [the GOP] fits, real fits."

Carville's blunt remarks underscored a demographic reality that shrewd Republicans also admit: As the nation grows browner, the GOP is increasingly a party of older whites. Vehement anti-immigrant rhetoric alienates Latino voters.

That alone ought to give Republicans the courage to join with Democrats to adopt comprehensive immigration reform. And then there's this: It's the right thing to do.

Classification

---

Language: ENGLISH

Publication-Type: Newspapers

Subject: IMMIGRATION (90%); IMMIGRATION LAW (90%); IMMIGRATION REGULATION & POLICY (90%); CITIZENSHIP (89%); ILLEGAL IMMIGRANTS (89%); US REPUBLICAN PARTY (89%); CITIZENSHIP LAW (75%); FOREIGN LABOR (75%); TERRITORIAL & NATIONAL BORDERS (75%); US DEMOCRATIC PARTY (75%); US FEDERAL GOVERNMENT (75%); LEGISLATION (74%); LEGISLATIVE BODIES (74%); NATIONAL SECURITY (74%); POLITICAL PARTIES (74%); SOCIAL SECURITY (74%); BORDER CONTROL (73%); US PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES 2008 (73%); US PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES 2012 (73%); US PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES 2016 (73%); CRAFT & TRADE WORKERS (69%); HEALTH CARE POLICY (69%); BIOMETRICS (60%)

Industry: HEALTH CARE POLICY (69%)

Person: BARACK OBAMA (73%); JOHNNY ISAKSON (54%); LINDSEY GRAHAM (54%); CHARLES SCHUMER (53%); SAXBY CHAMBLISS (53%)

Geographic: ATLANTA, GA, USA (79%); GEORGIA, USA (92%); UNITED STATES (93%); GAMBIA (79%)

Load-Date: April 4, 2010